NACHHALTIGKEIT.
SUSTAINABILITY.
DURABILITÉ.
BONN.

Events of recent months have demonstrated that climate impacts are already hitting communities worldwide. Several cities, including ICLEI member cities, have suffered considerable human and economic losses. While some communities will take years to return to their normal activities, others have already bounced back. In these rebound situations, resilience is the key word.

Since 2010, with Resilient Cities, ICLEI has fulfilled a growing need: to bring together in a single place the knowledge, the experience, and the solutions required by local governments and their partners to adapt to climate change.

With your participation and a unique stakeholder platform of over 30 organizations, Resilient Cities will become the place where local governments will find the inspiration and means to anticipate changes and prepare their communities to cope with a historic challenge.

David Cadman
President, ICLEI

A warm welcome to Bonn, Germany's United Nations City, and welcome to Resilient Cities 2011. On the threshold of the Subsidiary Bodies to the UN Climate Convention, the second edition of this leading platform on cities and climate adaptation brings together mayors, city leaders and experts from all over the world! Already in 2010, mayors from five continents postulated their need of multilevel cooperation and a new design of international funding strategies. Now we will again listen to the voices of cities worldwide. And like in 2010, we will be able to reach out to national delegations within an official side event on the first day of the UN Subsidiary Bodies meeting.

As Mayor of Bonn and Vice Chair of the World Mayors Council on Climate Change, I count on the expertise and experience of the local level to adapt to climate change. And I am particularly happy that so many African and Asian cities will be part of the dialogue this year and will share their knowledge with us.

Bonn has been a partner of ICLEI from the beginning and it is our common hope that Resilient Cities 2011 will help to find ways to advance both financing and implementing the good concepts in cities worldwide. I am looking forward to fruitful debates with you and to hearing about your inspiring ideas for successful climate adaptation!

Jürgen Nimptsch
Mayor, City of Bonn; Vice Chair, WMCCC

The Cancun Agreements were a relative success. Progress was made not only in advancing commitments to the Green Climate Fund and to an Adaptation Framework, but also in recognizing local governments as governmental stakeholders in the UNFCCC process. Still, more commitments are needed to have a chance to keep the global average temperatures under the 2°C threshold.

In the meantime, climate impacts are already being felt worldwide. Many local leaders, because they are directly accountable to their communities, have already taken action to embark on a low-carbon and resilient path. To make sure these efforts are recognized, world cities signed the Mexico City Pact in November 2010 cementing the ambition of the 2010 Bonn Declaration of Mayors and committing to report their climate actions globally in a measurable, reportable and verifiable (MRV) way.

On this solid basis, Resilient Cities 2011 and its Mayors Adaptation Forum provide a great opportunity to go even further by giving flesh to the concept of inverted finance mechanisms for urban sustainability and resilience. We can all be excited to discuss in Bonn the ideas assembled in ICLEI's White Paper "Financing the Resilient City", which makes a groundbreaking contribution on the road to Durban and the COP17.

Marcelo Ebrard
Mayor, Mexico City; Chair, WMCCC

Preparing for the impacts of climate change on the world's cities is a major challenge of the 21st century. It will be those living in poverty, especially in the developing countries, who will suffer most in any climate crisis.

It is heartening that local leaders are beginning to find solutions. Cities are assessing which communities, places and sectors are most vulnerable. They are investing in climate proofing their infrastructure networks. They are integrating adaptation action in urban planning initiatives and municipal finance scenarios.

We salute the Resilient Cities congress and commend ICLEI for taking the lead in forging the partnership of organizations supporting the congress.

Local officials and leaders often learn best from one another, and this congress is a golden opportunity. The congress also offers an ideal opportunity to forge a common position from which to lobby for a fair share of the adaptation resources pledged – resources cities so desperately need to become more resilient.

UN-Habitat is honoured to serve on the Program Committee of the Resilient Cities congress, and I am pleased to serve as a Patron of the congress.

I wish the distinguished delegates in the Resilient Cities congresses every success with their deliberations.

*Dr. Joan Clos
Under Secretary General and Executive Director, UN-Habitat; Congress Patron*

Welcome to the second world congress on urban resilience and cities' adaptation to climate change!

Resilient Cities has been successfully established as the global forum for climate change adaptation and resilience-building in cities and towns. Its second edition, Resilient Cities 2011, will once again provide a platform for cities and local governments, urban planners, national governments and multilateral organizations, finance institutions, science and research organizations, infrastructure solution providers and development organizations to share, learn, and exchange on challenges, approaches, solutions and experiences.

For the coming decades, making our cities and towns resilient to the effects of climate change will be a key challenge for human societies and economies across the globe. Building resilience to climate change cannot reasonably be decoupled from achieving resilience to natural and industrial disasters. Moreover, the task is to work on urban resilience as a more general concept.

Resilient Cities 2011 will see a continuation from the discussions of 2010. For example ICLEI's White Paper "Financing the Resilient City" will be launched at a high-level panel in response to a mandate given at Resilient Cities 2010 to further investigate the concept of finance „inversion“. This report proposes a framework for matching bottom-up resilience demand with locally responsive finance supply.

Resilient Cities 2011 will see a great diversity of activity including four plenaries, three thought-provoking Strategy Dialogues, four Reality Check workshops each focusing on one city over a half-day session, eight City-in-Focus sessions, 25 theme sessions, among many others. It will also host the two-day Mayors Adaptation Forum convened by the World Mayors Council on Climate Change. Other partners have chosen Resilient Cities 2011 as the place to sign agreements, announce initiatives and events, and launch reports and tools.

Organized back-to-back with the UNFCCC June talks, the Resilient Cities congress will reach out to the global climate community through the voice of the Mayors Adaptation Forum.

Thank you for being part of it!

*Konrad Otto-Zimmermann
Secretary General, ICLEI; Congress Chair*
